

Theory of Change

Under-resourced South African schools face many obstacles in adequately preparing their learners for the future.

The EduRise programme supports all stakeholders in a child's schooling journey, cultivating a holistic educational environment that helps learners receive quality education.

1. Skilled school management sets schools up for success

If school leadership is capacitated through training and support then they can put systems in place to enable schools to function efficiently and cultivate a holistic education that strives for excellence.

2. Equipped principals can better support educators

If school leadership plans to support educators in core and holistic subjects then educators will be able to deliver holistic quality education.

3. Capable educators can open up opportunities for learners

If educators are supported through training, mentorship and peer collaboration then they will improve their content and pedagogical knowledge, gain classroom confidence, and shift their attitude towards holistic education.

4. Capacitated community members can impact parents

If school governing bodies members are taught how to support schools and communicate with parents on how to actively support their children then supported parents can better understand how to actively support their children in their learning journey.

5. Learners who receive holistic education are more knowledgeable, healthy and creative

If learners receive opportunities to develop their holistic selves (physical, social and environmental through core subjects, creative arts, environmental education, physical education), and are provided with quality education resources throughout their schooling careers, then they'll receive a quality holistic education that unlocks and develops their full potential.
